

FR-103. DEVELOPMENT OF THE SOVIET BALLISTIC MISSILE THREAT (1960).

3 reels, 35mm, color, sound, edited, 1925 feet, quality: Good (Basic: Orig color)

An Air Intelligence Briefing tracing the development of the Soviet ballistic missile threat from its inception, just after the close of WW II, to 1 January 1960. The introduction is made by Col. L.A. Hall, Director of Warning and Threat Assessment, Office of the Assistant Chief of Staff, Intelligence. (Photo'd by 1365th Photo Sqdn.)

- 1) Introduction by Col. Linscott A. Hall, speaking from his desk.
- 2) Lt. Col. Joel Parks gives an Air Intelligence Briefing on: (a) significant aspects of the development of the Soviet ICBM including charts showing Soviet missile test ranges and activities at Kapustin Yar and Tyura Tam, and our long range surveillance radars; (b) the ICBM threat to the U.S. including charts showing ICBM weapon characteristics, probable launch sites, targets in the U.S., Soviet ICBM and Strategic bomber/tanker and nuclear submarine capabilities against the U.S. in the period from 1960 to 1963, and the expected capabilities during the 1964 to 1970 period.

THE END