

Cyber OpseC protecting yourself Onl

InTErnET COmmuniCaTion In

Our carelessness makes the job easy for the adversary.

the internet was designed to withstand nuOlexacarelessness makes the job easy for attack, not to be secure from its own usershe adversary.

- Never assume security, assume it's unsecurtédadequate protection is unavailable, don't
- When security is needed, have trained IT it over the Internet. Evaluate other options an security people in your organization seek and to get secure tools. implement proper tools.

• If you have secure tools, actually use them. you don't know how, find out. Laziness is the People can easily send fake e-mails that appeaersary's best friend.

to be from people you know/trust.

- Always digitally sign messages.
- In all cases (even with signed messages) personalize an e-mail enough so that it's obvious a real person sent it.
- · Always verify suspicious messages before acting.

 Don't let forwarded and repeatedly replied n sages snowball. Eliminate the unnecessary da • Encourage everyone else to sign their messages. in one e-mail.

> unless you specifically want everyone to see everyone else's e-mail address. In all other ca send it to yourself (because everyone knows who you are already) and use BCC (blind carbon copy) instead.

Even e-mails that are legit can be captured and read/modified in transit.

- Secure e-mails with digital encryption.
- Use file encryption or password protection if e-mail encryption isn't available.

BrOwSIng The v

Clicking any link online tells the target Web site which site you just came from.

Cookies make shopping carts and online Search engines track your search history and accounts work, but can be a risk in severalstonesit in databases; this can reveal a lot of information about you and your job in aggregation

- · Delete cookies regularly or disable cookies through your browser. You can "whitelist" • Use generic information when possible cookies from sites you need/trust while still(e.g., zip codes instead of addresses). blocking all others. Alternate search engines to improve your re-
- Never use the "remember me" function on the prevent a single engine from getting the sites. This greatly increases your odds of hample picture. your account hijacked. If you use related services, always log out b and use a function called "Web bugs" or "beacons" to do it. they look like ordinary images and are activated simply by viewing a Web page or e-mail.

• HTML bugs can only be blocked with specifical information you hadn't intended. tools (hopefully being handled by your IT • When clicking links in search results, ask if a department).

selecting "text-only" in your e-mail settingsink to your address bar instead of clicking it. using an e-mail program that blocks images
When posting links on a Web site you contro searching so they can't tie your results to you Companies want to know where you go online count (e.g., Log out of Yahoo! Mail before using Yahoo! Search).

> Clicking any link online tells the target Web si which site you just came from. this can give of the data (search terms) in your address ba • E-mail bugs can be completely blocked bygive data away. If so, copy and paste a result ask if you want to broadcast to the linked site the fact that you linked to them. If not, print to links, but don't make them clickable so people have to cut and paste them instead.

BrOwSIng The v

you have to prevent bad code from gettinge owners of one site can easily try that name of the alert and ask your IT department to run and password at other popular sites and see if the second of the site of tool. If the second of the site of tool. If the site of tool. If the second of the second of the site of tool. If the second of the second imposter sites will often mimic a legitimate slite is for the HTTPS in the address bar to ver URL through a common misspelling or by using the transaction is secure—before entering another extension—like dot-com instead of dot username, password, or any other impornet. Get into the habit of typing Web site names into a search engine instead of the address bar. if it's OK to broadcast openly and think twice

 Many search engines pre-scan sites for malicious code and will warn you when you click them.

 Many anti-virus products have "site advisor functions that provide visual warning icons for etermine if the alert is real by closing all known bad sites.

• Search engines correct spelling, making it98st near the alert itself ). likely you'll go to an unintended site.

Password security is key!

installation warnings are the last chance you Never give any site any password for anyhave to prevent bad code from getting into yo computer. they claim to be a "video player up reason. Most social networking sites ask date" or "critical patch," but are often viruses for e-mail passwords while others ask for banking and credit card passwords. No mattegay no to any "active-x" control or install wa how much they promise to protect and noting unless you are sure of who created it, who misuse the information, history shows others, and what it will do once installed. wise. The consequences of disregarding this rule can be severe.

Be cautious of fake alerts that look like legitimate warnings or system messages, but are n before clicking the "submit" button.

browser windows from the taskbar (don't click

• If the alert remains, look to see if it mention a Web site to visit or tool to download. If so, perform a Web search on the site or tool. If the

POSTING Onli

It is hard and often impossible to remove information from the Web...
• Third party site

Public visibility.

Watch for metadata in files.

- Most things posted online are visible to evelyicrosoft Office documents typically have a one online (good and bad alike).
   creator's name and organization in the file pro
- Remember that even things posted "privately often become public by accident or due to weak of the security.
   Photos may also list names (if software was
- Anything posted to your organization's Websited with the camera) and can also include that's not protected by password or PKI autipes coordinates where the photo was taken. The protection is publicly visible. Several other method editing software must be used to view ods of protection are commonly attempted, and remove "EXIF metadata" in photos. but can be bypassed easily (domain restriction, robots.txt file, etc.).

Don't rely on third parties sites to keep dinformation safe. Buildings or natural features in the backgrounce can give away location.

Reflective surfaces may show people, names

- Third party sites may have been initiated <code>Offiler</code> critical information.

  filtrated by adversaries putting your data at risk.

   Photos of small animals or objects taken on
- Data centers used by these sites may be inadd often provide palm and fingerprints to countries with weak data protection laws. the adversary.
- Third parties are often hacked or sell user data outright.

it is hard and often impossible to remove info mation from the Web after it has been posted so be careful in the posting process before it's too late.

PraCTICE GOOd SySTEm

Keep your computer secure.

them when you must.

Dispose of media properly.

- Lock your computer when walking away.
   Data recovery is very sophisticated. Learn are
- Don't use a government laptop on your per llow your organization's media destruction sonal Internet or at hotspots unless instructed. by your security officer that you may do so. Remember that nearly all devices have data
- Don't leave laptops in hotels or cars unless thrage. Treat any USB device (not just thumb unavoidable, but use a locking cable or hiderives), floppies, CDs, phones, cameras, and hard drives as a disposal risk.
- Make sure your laptop has full disk encryptioned password safety. installed before taking it out of secure spaces.
- Don't allow others to use your government Don't e-mail or store any passwords unencry computer without your direct oversight.

ed. Remember that a password to a classified system must be handled as classified itself.

Remember that a password to a classified  $^{\text{Re wary of devices.}}$

 Don't put passwords on sticky notes or note. pads unless you physically secure them.

system must be handled as classified itself on't connect any USB device, floppy disk, or CD to your computer unless it has been care Learn how to create hard to guess, but easy fully scanned beforehand. Even store-bought member passwords and change them often products sometimes have viruses.

> Disable auto-run and auto-play functionality to help limit the damage a media virus can do.

Protect your Portable d

not security.

Wireless allows adversaries to connect at Portable wireless (particularly RFiD in badges distances of up to a mile or more. can be used for individual identification, these devices must include strong authentication ar Your movements can be tracked. encryption to deter these risks.

- Stored or transmitted data can be stolen. Copying at a distance thus invalidating their
- Stored or transmitted data can be modified or keyless entry systems and personal identified. cation (such as with US passcards).

Many portable devices (phones, laptops, earpiec-es) include wireless capability, but not security.

- Turn off wireless if it's not necessary.
- · Triggering cameras or even roadside bombs targeted for individuals.
- If security is present, learn and activate all security features appropriately.

Portable devices are easily lost or stolen.

- Remember commercial security is weak and ways encrypt important data. shouldn't be relied on in most cases.
- Put strong lock-codes and passwords on you

Many portable devices (phones, laptops, when in doubt, pull the battery (where abbevices to prevent tampering. earpieces) include wireless capability, but and put the device in an RF shielded container. Reep them secure and out of adversary hand · Always first ask if portable devices are necessary for your mission. They're no risk if they're not used.

It is vital that we all understand that even information unClaSSIfIEd is still important and in need of protection.... The information we put out there is it and forever and it is incumbent upon all of us to strotthat before putting anything out in the public do

—LTG Keith B . Alexander, USA Director, National Security Agency Executive Agent for Operations Security

