SUBJECT: Argentina Declassification Project Narrative

This narrative provides a detailed summary of actions by the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) in response to a Presidential Tasking from the Executive Secretary of the National Security Council (NSC) on June 13, 2016. The Presidential Task directed various Executive branch departments and agencies (agencies) to search for records relating to human rights abuses committed in Argentina between January 1, 1975, and December 31, 1984, and to review responsive records for public access. In response, NARA assembled staff, including archivists from the National Declassification Center (NDC), the Presidential Libraries, and the Center for Legislative Archives, and developed a plan to complete the task. In conducting its search, NARA staff utilized search strategies focused on records and records series that were unprocessed or were otherwise not publicly available. NARA staff used electronic and paper finding aids and other databases to identify responsive records, and searched electronic and paper record files in classified and unclassified systems. NARA staff evaluated records for responsiveness, erring on the side of inclusiveness. Those records initially determined to be responsive were reviewed for public access on a word-for-word basis, using standards established in section 3 of Executive Order (E.O.) 13526, "Classified National Security Information," and common public release standards agreed to by all participating agencies.

The mission of NARA is to provide public access to Federal Government records in our custody and control. Public access to government records strengthens democracy by allowing Americans to claim their rights of citizenship, hold their government accountable, and understand their history so they can participate more effectively in their government. As our nation’s record-keeper, NARA was pleased to support this important project. In all, twenty-five NARA staff members spent 1,280 hours searching for and reviewing responsive records for public access. NDC staff, the Presidential Libraries and Center for Legislative Archives searched over 740 cubic feet of records and identified over 1,300 records totaling approximately 9,000 pages.

Search Methodologies and Strategies:

NARA staff utilized the date range and the 19-page list of terms that the NSC provided to agencies and searched unprocessed or withdrawn Federal records, Presidential records, donated Presidential materials, Congressional records and records previously withdrawn from public access. NARA staff utilized electronic and paper finding aids, accession dossiers, and databases to search for collections, series and accessions where responsive records may be located. The search included both classified records as well as unclassified records. For Federal Government records, NARA staff worked collaboratively and included staff from Research Services, and the NDC. The NDC also worked closely with staff from the various agencies to identify potentially relevant series to search and ensure completeness.

NARA staff did not search records that are publicly available. In fact, many records related to U.S. policy towards Argentina during this time period are publicly available. These records include electronic Department of State (State) cables, various files from the Presidential Libraries, and records of Congressional hearings and reports in the Center for Legislative Archives. NARA recommends that historians, researchers, and other users consult available researcher aids, including the National Archives Catalog, the Guide to Federal Records in the National Archives, the Access to Archival Databases (AAD), findings aids at the Presidential Libraries, and other finding aids to identify relevant records. For additional information, visit: www.archives.gov/research.

Presidential Libraries:

NARA staff at four Presidential Libraries participated in this project. Staff from the Jimmy Carter, Gerald R. Ford, and Ronald W. Reagan Presidential Libraries searched their Presidential materials, while staff at the George H.W. Bush Presidential Library searched their Vice Presidential materials. These four Presidential Libraries searched their unprocessed and withdrawn records collections. For additional information on collections searched as part of this project, see Tab A.

Federal Records at NARA:

NDC staff were active participants in this project, identifying various Federal records series and specific accessions to search for potentially responsive records, and assisted agencies as they conducted additional searches. The NDC staff also searched records from the 2015 Brazilian Human Rights Project, and identified records that were not responsive to that specific request and therefore were not included in that public release. In all, NDC and agency staff identified approximately 400 documents totaling 4,630 pages. These records were created by the Air Force, Army, Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Joint Staff, U.S. Information Agency, and Department of State and were found in accessioned paper records. During review by NSC staff, some of the records initially identified were determined to be non-responsive and were not included in the final production. The NDC staff also searched specific accessions from the U.S. Agency for International Development and the Department of Labor, as the Labor Department periodically maintained a Labor Attaché stationed at the U.S. Embassy in Buenos Aires during the 1970s. No responsive records were identified.

Other agencies participating in this project have not accessioned records to NARA relating to this project. These agencies include: the Central Intelligence Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the National Security Agency, the Department of the Navy, the Office of the Secretary of Defense, and the U.S. Southern Command. These agencies have conducted separate searches of their records and will post all releasable records on their respective websites.
State identified an additional 1,822 electronic cables. While many of these electronic records are accessioned to NARA, not all electronic cables have been accessioned. For continuity purposes and to ease search, these records were declassified and included as part of State’s project and all responsive electronic cables are available on State’s website (for additional information, see: https://foia.state.gov/Search/Collections.aspx). For additional information on Federal records searched at NARA for this project, see Tab B.

NARA also accessioned a special collection of records from State identified as “The State Department Special Collection Relating to Argentina.” This collection comprises approximately 786 documents totaling 3,495 pages. These documents were collected from multiple agencies by State’s Office of the Historian as historians conducted research for the Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS), 1977–1980, Volume XXIV, South America; Latin America Region publication. For further information on the declassification and publication of this FRUS volume, please see State’s narrative. Records in the Special Collection, while deemed important for understanding and illustrating U.S. policy toward Argentina during the Carter administration, were not included in the published FRUS volume. State conducted a declassification and public access review of these records and coordinated a declassification and public access review with other U.S. Government agencies with equity information in the records. Interagency review of these records was coordinated by the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, and they are published as part of NARA’s release.

Once the NDC and agencies identified responsive records, the NDC created declassification review projects for them, scanning each paper record into digital format to allow agencies to review and, if appropriate, recommend redactions for information requiring continued restriction. NDC staff also coordinated and managed all necessary referral review by agencies with equity ownership of information within each document. NDC staff applied the NSC and State declassification waivers that allowed for streamlined public access review. Records identified by NDC staff were reviewed by the appropriate agencies. NDC staff applied redactions to the records and performed a quality assurance review prior to release.

Center for Legislative Archives:

The Center for Legislative Archives preserves and makes available to researchers the historical records of the U.S. House of Representatives (House) and the U.S. Senate (Senate), including the official Committee records. Access to these records is subject to the rules of the House and Senate, respectively. The Center does not include the office records of individual Members of Congress – these records are considered personal and are maintained by the individual Member of Congress or her/his designee (often an archival institution affiliated with a university or college or historical society in the Member’s district or State). For Congressional records, Center staff searched databases and finding aids for responsive official Committee records and other official records of Congress using the search terms from the NSC list of terms and the inclusive dates. This search yielded 11 Congressional hearings and reports. For additional information on them, please see Tab C.
Review Processes:

NARA does not have original classification authority; therefore, it relies on equity-owning agencies to review their classified national security information for declassification. As NARA staff identified responsive records, it applied the NSC and State waivers and declassified information where possible. All remaining classified records were referred to those agencies with an equity interest. Those agencies reviewed each record on a word-for-word basis, redacting precise information that still requires continued classification in accordance with section 3.3(b) of E.O. 13526, and may not be publicly released. Agencies primarily redacted information to protect sources and methods. These redactions are indicated by a “25X1” code on the record. Pursuant to section 3.3(b)(1) of E.O. 13526, the release of this information should clearly and demonstrably be expected to “reveal the identity of a confidential human source, a human intelligence source, a relationship with an intelligence or security service of a foreign government or international organization, or a nonhuman intelligence source; or impair the effectiveness of an intelligence method currently in use, available for use, or under development.” In other limited instances, records were redacted for foreign policy reasons where release of the information would cause serious harm to the ongoing diplomatic activities of the United States. These redactions are indicated by a “25X6” code on the record. Pursuant to section 3.3(b)(6) of E.O. 13526, the release of this information should clearly and demonstrably be expected to “reveal information, including foreign government information, that would cause serious harm to relations between the United States and a foreign government, or to ongoing diplomatic activities of the United States.

NARA staff screened each record for public release in accordance with relevant public access rules and regulations, as well as the public access procedures for this project. A small number of records were redacted in accordance with specific statutes. These redactions are indicated by a “FOIA B3” (Freedom of Information Act Exemption 3, 5 U.S.C. 552) and cite the specific statute on the record. In rare instances, NARA staff also redacted specific information about specific individuals the disclosure of which would invade that individual's personal privacy. These redactions are indicated by a “FOIA B6.”

Federal records accessioned to NARA were processed by NDC staff, who scanned all responsive records. NDC staff applied the NSC and State waivers and declassified information where possible. Other records required declassification review by equity-owning agencies. NDC staff created special projects for these records and closely tracked progress in agency reviews, including coordinating resolution of conflicting declassification determinations.

All responsive records from the four Presidential Libraries were shipped to the Presidential Materials Division in Washington, D.C. It reviewed all responsive records and utilized the NSC and State declassification waivers where possible. Those records that it could declassify were provided to the Government of Argentina and publicly released in August 2016. The Presidential Materials Division forwarded those records it was unable to declassify to the NSC staff so it could coordinate declassification review by equity-owning agencies. The NSC staff compiled the results of those reviews. These records were provided to the Government of Argentina and publicly released in December 2016.
Conclusion:

In response to the final task of this project, NARA ultimately identified 1,004 responsive Federal documents totaling 7,165 pages relating to human rights abuses in Argentina during the period specified. After review of these records, NARA, in consultation with equity-holding agencies, is pleased to release 804 documents in full (totaling 5,713 pages), and 186 documents in part (totaling 1,394 pages). 14 documents (totaling 58 pages) were denied in full on the basis of their continued classification and/or statutory protection. These totals are in addition to the 1,664 pages released by Presidential Libraries in previous tasks.

Questions regarding NARA’s search and review should be directed to Don McIlwain, Chief, Classified FOIA and MDR Division, NDC. Don.mcilwain@nara.gov or (301) 837-0587.
