OPERATIONAL ASSESSMENT:

12/7/86 12:00

1. Entire Cinco Complex now under US Control. Of initial Adversary force estimate of 13 persons, nine (9) are confirmed killed, as many as four are estimated to be at large. The location of the Leader cannot be confirmed. However, record of "GOOCH" suggests a clever adversary and veteran of several well-known, successful operations. If his body cannot be identified it is highly probable that he is moving toward CONUS.

2. Initial estimates of the Gray Major's plan are confirmed to date by events. Two stolen devices were intended for placement and detonation - one in Montrev, the other in CONUS. One probable device is located in a box is apparently confirmed by radiation readings, on the second level of the tower at Cinco North. Extensive booby trapping of Cinco North tower prevents close approach to suspected device as of this report.

device found, then the initial two-weapon CONUS-Montrev Plan remains a valid estimate.

3. No information or evidence indicates the primary goal of this combined operation of two states, initiated by the Gray Major. The extensive booby trapping of the North tower device seems to indicate that the plan scenario now unfolding requires time for an event prior to either the timed or accidental detonation of the device. It is possible that this "window" may be intended to allow time for a demand or for completion of another phase of the operation perhaps installation of the CONUS device.

BEHAVIORAL ASSESSMENT:

CONCLUSIONS:

The adversary appears to have a high degree of resolve in achieving his goals. He is planful and prepared to sacrifice his own members to achieve them. He appears fully rational, coherent, and "cold-blooded", intent on pursuing his course, making no attempt to date to communicate any rationale for his actions, to impose demands on anyone, or to explicitly formulate a threat, as in a verbal communication, to anyone.

His immediate objective in Montrev appears partly to be to "buy time", presumably to obtain sufficient time to fully develop the projected CONUS threat. The loss of men in the 12/7 assault strike might best be evaluated as a loss of "pawns" that the adversary willingly incurred in order to obtain time to put other pieces in place in CONUS.

RATIONALE:

1. From to outset, the adversary's plan has been very complex and comprehensive, involving a number of nations and a number of phases.

2. The adversary has made none of the traditional moves in a threat, namely, a threat, a demand, or a rationale for his actions, suggesting that he is in control within a more complex plan.

3. The adversary has set up the Montrev situation in such a way that if and when he surfaces in CONUS and makes an explicit threat and demand, he must be taken seriously.
